

Are Canadian-Made BBQs Extinct?

The BBQ Answer Man

This year I have heard that another major Canadian brand name has moved all of its bbq manufacturing offshore. If customers do not investigate the details they will be led to believe they are still buying a Canadian product. However, when you come into Gasland you will see a commitment to North American manufacturing throughout the store including our gas fireplaces and lawn and garden product.

Did you know that Napoleon is the largest privately owned manufacturer of grills in North America? Our Napoleon gourmet grill manufacturer has made a commitment to keeping its core product Canadian with a 500,000+ square foot factory in Barrie, Ontario. We purchase directly from our friends at the Napoleon factory offering our customers the quickest and most comprehensive product support in the bbq industry.

With a Canadian-made bbq you can get the accessories and parts you need, when you need them. It is nearly impossible to find covers, rotisseries, burners, hoses, fittings and conversion kits for made-in-China monstrosities. Are you OK with waiting months for a vital bbq part you ordered from a 1-800# across the globe? Do you want to package up your dirty defective old bbq part and then pay the shipping to mail it back to the manufacturer? I have no patience for that nonsense when I have better options.

Your voice can be heard and you can do your part to keep made in China products from ending up in our B.C. and Alberta landfills. These new disposable stainless steel bbqs aren't even lasting as long as the old style cast aluminum ones from 15 years ago. Due to low grade steel, welds, and fasteners, these poorly manufactured bbq's fall apart at the seams.

Here is the bottom line. Make an educated choice. Look for the manufacturing label and do not be misled by the importer's address and most importantly, don't follow the crowd into the box store to make a $1000 mistake on a bbq that will last you under 5 years. So are Canadian-made bbqs extinct? Not if Gasland has anything to do with it. Come and experience our thriving breed of Napoleon Canadian-made grills.
